

Sips and Sweet Dreams

Spend the night at these world-renowned wineries

Travel is on the rise, and so is wine tourism—the pursuit of wine-focused experiences around the globe. And while visiting vineyards is always good cause for a getaway, it only gets better when you can stay on such grounds—especially when they’re as thoughtfully appointed as every bottle and glass.

Thankfully, several venues are on the case, inviting guests to visit not only for tastings but for overnights, too—and oftentimes, in quarters fit for royalty. Beyond a more holistic experience onsite, guests lingering longer have the chance to meet the locals, discover the culture, and tap into traditions—all practices we’re happy to drink to.

From a Southern France seaside resort to a hillside Napa retreat, here are four wineries to visit now for exceptional sips and slumber alike.

Abeja Winery & Inn | Walla Walla, Washington

Meet the winemakers, stroll the vineyards, and experience crush firsthand during fall months at this winery-meets-inn, situated in the foothills of the Blue Mountains. When Ken and Ginger Harrison bought the property and reimagined it in 2000, they still wanted to maintain much of the original wheat farm and inn's look and feel. Today, the 38-acre property reflects that charm alongside modern details throughout its seven rooms. It incorporates features like claw foot tubs, semi-private porches, vaulted ceilings, and heated basalt floors. Larger groups will do well by a stay in the Farmhouse, comprised of five bedrooms, attached, luxe bathrooms, and a large kitchen perfect for prepping big meals—which are best enjoyed on the wrap-around porch. Come morning, enjoy an upscale breakfast, and later on, the chance to taste the team's wine (both experiences included in your stay). Those wines make their way to the restaurant's dinner menu, too, serving as thoughtful pairings to chef Jake Crenshaw's Pacific Northwest cuisine.
